About us

Humana.Mente is a quarterly magazine of scientific divulgation and philosophical studies – a place where to find information and documentation on events and publications of philosophical interest, as well as an opportunity for the academic and scholar worlds to meet and confront each other.

Humana.Mente is the official journal of the Philosophical Library of Florence (Italian Philosophical Society). University professors, along with college graduates, PhD students and researchers from various Italian universities, make up the editorial staff of the magazine.

Humana.Mente was created with the main purpose of giving the opportunity of publication to papers or research excerpts that may contribute with innovative ideas to the contemporary philosophical debate.

Humana.Mente is open to the contribution of all those who do not consider philosophy as just mere historical investigation or hermeneutical activity, but who conceive it as a rigorous work of research, inspired by the actual belief that philosophical issues – too – deserve solutions, and that these may and should be conceptually clear and precise.

Drawing on an interdisciplinary approach ranging from philosophy of science to political philosophy, anthropology, philosophy of mind and ethical issues, Humana.Mente intends to present and propound with vigour NEW contents and ideas on the international stage.

How to Publish

If you want your contribution to be published in our magazine, please send it to: redazione@humana.mente.it. All submitted papers will be evaluated by a board of qualified referees.

Each issue of Humana.Mente focuses on a specific theme; if you are interested in the broad theme and the list of the topics for the forthcoming issues, you can either check out our website or you can directly contact the editors at:

redazione@humana.mente.it

Humana.Mente features contributions in English and Italian; papers in other languages are accepted as well.
